Favorite Apple Graph

Parent instructions: Cut up three different types of apples: green, red and pink. Have student sample one of each and decide which is their favorite by taste. Each child then colors in an apple template representing their favorite flavor distinguished by the three colors. You can create a large size graph to display in your homeschool room if you wish. Children then complete an individual graph representing their family and friend's favorite apple flavors.

Name: _____

Favorite Apple Graph

Instructions: Color in each grid, or draw an apple in each, representing the number of people in your family, neighborhood, or friend group who prefer green, pink or red apples.

Name: _____

Favorite Apple Graph

Instructions: Using your completed graph, answer the following questions:

1 How many people preferred green apples? _____

2 How many people preferred pink apples? _____

3 How many people preferred red apples? _____

4 Which color apple was the most popular? _____

5 Which apple was the least popular? _____

6 How many more people preferred red apples to green apples? _____

THE CHANGING LEAVES OF FALL

Read the story below and answer the questions on the following pages.

The world was changing. Each morning, when Emma walked to school, everything seemed just a little bit different. The once green leaves of the trees lining the streets were turning into shades of yellow, orange, and red.

The gentle rustling sound of summer leaves was changing to a crisp crunch underfoot. Emma's favorite tree in the park was transforming, its leaves changing from green to an autumn tapestry.

Emma visited the park every day and was beginning to get concerned. As the days passed, the leaves continued to change, their colors deepening each day.

Emma wandered around, checking on every leaf, worried they might fall off and leave the tree bare.

One day, Emma saw her friend, Jack, playing in the park. "Jack, do you know why the leaves are changing?" Emma asked. "It's fall, Emma!" Jack said with a smile. "Everything is supposed to change."

Emma furrowed her brow and tilted her head. "But why does it have to change? I liked it the way it was." Jack smiled. "Change can be beautiful, Emma. Just wait and see."

As the days went by, Emma watched the tree transform. The leaves turned into brilliant hues. Children played in leaf piles, and families gathered to admire the beautiful scenery. Emma's favorite tree was more dazzling and lively than ever.

One afternoon, Emma met her friend, Lily, at the park. "Do you see now, Emma? The change has brought new beauty and excitement," Lily said.

Emma nodded, her eyes wide with wonder. "I do, Lily. The tree is even more wonderful than before."

From that day on, Emma embraced the changes, running through the park with joy. She realized that sometimes, change brings new and beautiful things into our lives. And she was no longer concerned, but excited to see what the next season would bring.

Name: _____

INFRENCING

Make inferences about the story by answering the questions below.

Why is Emma concerned about the tree changing?

Why do you think Jack smiled when he told Emma about the changes?

What does Emma's daily visit to the park suggest about her character?

Why did Emma feel the tree was more dazzling and lively than ever?

Why did Emma's feelings about the tree change by the end of the story?

Reading Comprehension

HALLOWEEN

Halloween is celebrated annually on 31st October. Although today it has been commercialised to dress-ups, trick-or-treating and pumpkin carving, it had a much darker beginning.

Halloween originated from Samhain, the ancient 'festival of the dead' celebrated in Ireland and Scotland. To mark the end of Summer and the start of the New Year (which the Celts observed as 1st November), pagans would dress up in costumes and light bonfires to keep themselves safe from ghosts and evil spirits. They believed that on this night, the dead and living mixed. Poor children went from door to door promising to pray for household's dead relatives in exchange for food. Samhain is still celebrated today by some, but is different to modern day Halloween celebrations.

Centuries later, the Catholic church declared 1st November as All Saints Day. On this day, people honoured those who have gone to heaven. Festivities incorporated some of the traditions from Samhain.

- 1 Use a dictionary to define the word pagan:

- 2 Explain how the church attempted to Christianise the pagan Samhain festival:

- 3 What traditions of the ancient Samhain festival are evident in modern day halloween celebrations?

- 4 Should we continue to celebrate halloween today? Explain your response:
